THE NEW FREEDOM IN RUSSIA

It is hard to know the truth about the "new freedom in Russia." So many people who go over there to report conditions have their preconceptions and find exactly what they go after.

But recently at Tula, a small mining town near Moscow, an incident occurred that tells us practically all we need to know about the "new freedom" and its limitations.

The Russian government controls the metal works at Tula. The men had gone on strike and were threatening property damage. An assemblage collected, shouted "Down with the Soviet," and disobeyed orders to disperse.

What would have happened to such a gathering in the days of the czars? The answer is easy. Police or soldiers would have fired into the crowd. There would have been deaths, and not a few would have limped home bearing the wounds of battle.

What happened under the present "liberal" ruling regime in Russia. Were the strikers told with words that flowed like honey to "go home and be good boys"? Were they cautioned by all the standards of the "new freedom" in Russia that strikes really in the end didn't get anybody anything and were a lot of trouble anyhow?

What happened was this: Soviet militia opened up their guns upon the strikers and 15 of them were killed and 22 wounded.

It seems to make a little difference who owns the property?

A COMPARISON OF WAGES

If you don't think that the Canadian laborer is a whole lot better off than his European contemporaries, glance at these figures just issued by the Department of Labor:

Bricklayers, for instance, average the following daily wages: In France, $1.57; in Germany, $1.84; in Austria, $1.69; in Canada, $12.56. Carpenters fare thus: In England, $2.96; in Germany, $1.86; in Italy, $1.82; in Canada, $10.16.

Building trades laborers draw these daily rates: In Austria, $1.12; in Germany, $1.47; in Italy, 80c; in Canada, $4.00.

And that difference isn't eaten up by higher costs of living, either. Wages in this country now average 129 per cent higher than in 1913, while living costs are only 75 per cent higher.

In other words, an hour of work today will enable a Canadian workman to buy 30 per cent more than it would buy him before the war.

THE ASSET OF COURTESY

Of all the assets a business organization can possess, none is of much more importance than consistent, unvarying courtesy on the part of its employees.

The mental attitude of the general public is often extremely important. Many a person patronizes one store in preference to another because a clerk at the second store was once discourteous. Many a man travels by some certain railroad instead of another because a conductor on the first line once went out of his way to be courteous and attentive.

Courtesy is a little thing, but it is highly important. The man who is surly and gloomy has no place in modern business. And business, more and more, is coming to realize it.

WEDDED FOLK

A crusty old bachelor of an English magistrate, says the English papers, the other day fined a married couple because they had a slanging match on the outside of their home. He said the proper place for that kind of thing was inside the house, with doors bolted and windows closed, so that it would not disturb the neighbors.

He would have done well to remember an old French story which runs something like this:

Betrothal period:
He talks, She listens.
Honeymoon period:
She talks, He listens.
After life:
Both talk. The neighbors listen.

AERIAL TRAFFIC LAWS

The officials who have the final say-so on aerial traffic laws seem to be determined to enforce them.

Bern Acosta, who flew across the Atlantic with Byrd, recently was fined heavily for breaking various air regulations.

Now comes word from Montreal that Duke Shiller, one of Canada's most distinguished flyers, has lost his license for six months because the officials held him responsible for a recent airplane smashup.

The rules, evidently, are being enforced to the hilt without regard for big names. That is as it should be. Foolish risks cause accidents that discredit and halt the progress of aviation.

CANADA — DEPARTMENT OF MINES—GEOLOGICAL SURVEY
—A REPORT ON OIL AND GAS IN WESTERN CANADA

A report by Dr. G. S. Hunt and others on the oil and gas fields of Western Canada has just been published by the Geological Survey. The introductory part of the report is a concise presentation of the theories of the origin of petroleum and of the geological conditions favoring its accumulation. A chapter is devoted to a consideration of the carbon ratios of coal as an index to the occurrence of oil and gas in Western Canada and a chapter to geophysical methods of prospecting.

The main body of the report gives detailed descriptions of the various oil and gas fields, of the geological formations exposed on the surface and encountered in drilling, and of the structural features of the strata. It also gives information regarding the results of boring operations and a discussion of the oil and gas possibilities. These descriptions are written by the members of the staff of the Geological Survey that have most intimate knowledge of the fields under consideration.

In an appendix appears a list of the wells drilled in Western Canada with their exact location, their depth and the results obtained. Copies of the report may be had by applying to the Director, Geological Survey, Ottawa.

WHY ARE "DUDS"?

(By the Educational Committee of the Alberta Teachers' Alliance)

Every high school has its quota of so-called "duds," pupils who do not measure up to the standard set for high school accomplishment. In most cases one or two causes seem to be active: either the student is not interested in the sort of work that the high school offers him, or he lacks the necessary mental equipment. It is not often that a pupil is found who is constitutionally lazy; many children who appear to be lazy could be induced to work if the right stimulus were found or if they were given work that they had the ability to do.

It is folly for the teacher to tell an uninterested or incapable child that he is a "worthless good-for-nothing"; usually it is not true. On the other hand it is uneconomical administration for school boards to allow the schools to be cluttered up with uninterested and incapable children. And parents who insist on such children "getting an education" very often have a mistaken idea of the meaning of the word education.

The trouble at the present time seems to lie, not so much in the lack of facilities for training children who will not or can not do justice to academic instruction, as in the lack of facilities for advising pupils as to the type of training suitable to their needs and capabilities.

With a view to giving trials in Alberta to the ways in which children are given vocational advice in the principal Canadian centers of education, and as a preliminary to a more vigorous campaign for vocational guidance in schools, the Research Committee of the Alberta Teachers' Alliance has undertaken to devote considerable attention to securing information. D. L. Shortliffe, M. A., of Edmonton, is the chairman of the sub-committee on Vocational Guidance.

Youth, at the World Congress of Youth for Peace, meeting in Holland, is taking a firm stand against war. And why not? If youth can stand the brunt of attack in war, why should it not lead the attack against it?

GROWTH AND DEVELOPMENT OF THIS COMMUNITY

Remember Then That:

The business of a town is its very life-blood.

The stores and business houses are not alone for the merchants.

Prosperous merchants will make the community prosper.

The more buyers there are in a town, the greater "turn over" the merchants will have, and thus the more they will be able to reduce prices and increase the quality of the goods they sell.

Thus By Trading at Home

with the home town merchants the people thus become the builders of their own community.

No True Citizen

will stunt the natural growth and expansion of his home town by fostering the mail order business of far away communities.

Buy At Home

not to help the merchants, but to help the home community and yourself.
